Together we can save Chloe Saxby

Chloe Saxby is a gorgeous, affectionate, little girl from Woonona, Australia. Until the age of three, Chloe was running around, happy, healthy and loving life. She had just started dance lessons and loved them! Then overnight, she lost the use of her legs.

After eight months of testing, Chloe was diagnosed with Vanishing White Matter Disease, an extremely rare, degenerative and terminal brain disease. A bump to the head, high temperature, cold/flu, stress or fright could kill Chloe. This is a disease that doesn't allow children to be children.

Chloe is now seven and this disease has already confined her to a wheelchair, next it will paralyse her little body to the point that she won't be able to hold her head up, talk, see, hear or eat. She will experience a lot of pain and suffering and die at an early age, if the cure is not found in time.

BUT THERE IS HOPE!

Doctors are working on a cure with promising research taking place to stop the disease in its tracks. The problem however, is funding and speeding up the progress of this cure comes at a cost of approximately two million dollars. With only seven cases in Australia and 172 worldwide, pharmaceutical companies don't see it as commercially viable and it is therefore up to the families affected to raise the funds to save our children.

And we are in a race against time. The life expectancy on average is only five to ten years from disease onset. We are doing everything we possibly can to raise these lifesaving funds but we can't do it alone. With your help this cure can come in time to save Chloe.
